

I have learned that people have a common answer to whether or not they want to change their past with the answer being no. There is a thought that if you attract people who have a similar mindset to yourself. Many things, good and bad, have occurred in my life but I remain with the thought that I would not change anything that happened because every moment has affected who I am as a person today. Surrounding myself with people who have a similar mindset to me is not something that I do consciously but I think it is just something that happens.

I've realized that I lack intimacy in my life due to my upbringing, so I've been trying to find ways to address it. That's why I decided to write about the answers I receive from people close to me this time. I think writing can be a powerful tool for deepening my understanding of others and connecting with them on a deeper level. When I write, I have more time to reflect on what I'm hearing and respond thoughtfully, which can lead to more meaningful conversations. Writing also gives me a permanent record of the conversation, which I can revisit later to reinforce what I learned or share with others. Finally, writing can be a form of self-expression that allows me to explore my own thoughts and feelings more deeply. By putting my own thoughts and reactions to what I'm learning into writing, I may gain new insights and perspectives about myself and my relationships.

I was surprised to find out that some of the people I spoke with didn't mention me as a turning point in their lives, even though I considered them to be important to me. It's easy to feel disappointed or even a little hurt in those situations, but I try to remind myself that everyone's perspective is different. Perhaps what I thought was a significant moment for them didn't have the same impact on them. It's also possible that they didn't feel comfortable sharing that aspect of their lives with me. Despite this, I still gained valuable insight into their experiences and learned more about them as individuals. It's important to focus on the positive aspects of the conversation and not let the lack of a mention as a turning point diminish the positive impact I may have had on their lives in other ways.

In the future I will start coding sooner because I feel like I am short on time to make the end website. It can be easy to underestimate the amount of time needed to complete a project, especially if you're new to web development. That's why I've decided that in the future, I'll start coding sooner to give myself more time to work through any challenges that may arise and make changes as needed.

Overall, this project has been a valuable learning experience for me. Not only did I gain a better understanding of the people in my life, but I also learned more about myself and how I can improve my relationships. Writing about the answers I received allowed me to reflect on the conversations and deepen my understanding of the metaphysical concepts we discussed. It also provided me with a way to express my own thoughts and reactions to what I was learning. As I move forward, I plan to continue using writing as a tool for connection and self-expression. I also plan to take the lessons I learned about time management and apply them to my future projects. I'm excited to see where this passion project takes me next and how it will continue to shape my personal growth and development.